

Paragraph 1: economic hardships, perpetuating a vicious cycle of poverty. The ICRW underscores that families, facing financial constraints, view early marriages as a strategy to reduce the economic burden. This practice not only curtails educational opportunities for girls but also perpetuates gender inequality. Breaking this cycle requires targeted interventions that address economic vulnerabilities and challenge prevailing societal norms.

Paragraph 2: Moreover, the health repercussions of child marriages are alarming, as highlighted by Girls Not Brides. Early pregnancies in adolescents, often a consequence of these marriages, pose significant health risks for both mothers and infants. Complications during childbirth are higher among young mothers, exacerbating maternal mortality rates. To mitigate these effects, comprehensive health education programs and accessible healthcare services are imperative to empower young brides with knowledge and support.
